

BIO:ROBERT ROEHL

Bob Roehl is an operations and administration executive. In 1989, he created Roehl Communications, which has provided operational, organizational, and financial consulting services to U.S. and international corporations, P.T.T.s (national postal, telephone, and telegraph authorities which are typically responsible for modern communications infrastructure), and to broadcasters and cablecasters. He was a member of the negotiating team, which is credited with forming SOVAM Teleport, the first telecommunications joint venture between the United States and the former Soviet Union.

Prior to forming Roehl Communications, Bob held senior management positions at IDB Communications Group, Inc., NETCOM International, Inc., and at PBS member stations.

In his thirty-five years in the communications and broadcast industries, he has had principle responsibilities for: operational management, network design, contractual and financial management, and domestic and international client negotiations.

Bob obtained his B.A. in Sociology at Marietta College, and A.B.D. for Ph.D. in Television and Radio Communications from Ohio University.
